

Warning!

This show is ludicrous. So don't claim afterwards that you weren't warned. If you are frightened by the prospect of two black dildos, voyeurism, strange milk-coloured stains or dogs, turn back now. A test-run of the show was given to a man on the bus who was mumbling to himself, rubbing his crotch and dribbling food crumbs on to his polo shirt. Even he thought it was too much and got off at the next stop. Such people are the harshest critics. And the most dangerous.

The cast will appear unwashed, foul-mouthed and deluded. They didn't find it difficult to adapt to their roles. Someone will attempt to sing a song. Several times. You have been warned! If you (and you will) find it offensive, tell someone (preferably strangers) outside in the street. Don't tell us. We've given up. Next year's show is even worse.

No one is responsible for this abomination, and, quite frankly, we don't know any better. Donations will be spent unwisely. And don't feed the actors. They're not used to regular meals.

What the hell is going on?

'Jack Offline' provides a disturbing insight into the dysfunctional lives of socially inept Jackwert, dim-wit brother Grant, and Mum's new boyfriend, Craig 'Piss Pants' Johnson. Join them as they exhibit some really enviable family values and do their best to disprove the theory of evolution.

"Hilariously inappropriate"

Chortle.co.uk

Will Jackwert get rid of Craig and return his lifesavings before Mum finds out? Will Craig get his demo made before Grant turns psycho? And will Mum ever get the chance to try out her new Sperminator dildo? The answers are dubious and highly distasteful - as usual.

"Priceless mockumentary genius ... gold"

Three Weeks ★★★★★

Ladma are known for their award-winning alternative comedy. They have performed at a number of festivals and their previous show - Ladma vs. The World - sold-out at the Brighton Fringe Festival and received a four star review from Three Weeks at the Edinburgh Fringe Festival in 2008.
